

Assignment 2

#Do you think competing in sports is good for young children? Explain.

⇒ Sports participation is an interesting concern especially in regards to young children. It has both pros and cons and none of which can outweigh the other. I believe participating in sports is beneficial for young children but with some caveats.

Sports (~~sport~~) in general is considered as the best teacher of discipline. People involved in sports are more refined, and disciplined and diligent in their work. Sports especially team sports heavily rely on teamwork. Hence, from an early age children who play such sport understand the depth and need of teamwork. Sports also help with keeping the children which in turn keep various health risks such as obesity, cholesterol etc in check.

As nothing is perfect in the world, (~~sports~~) or participating in sports has its caveats for young children. Firstly, at a young age their muscles and bones are not fully developed, which could lead to severe injuries to the joints and muscles that may ^{prove to be} ~~cause~~ irreparable ~~injury~~. Secondly, at a young age, children need to focus at their studies as well, due to which they may not be able to give ~~their~~ continuous effort to sports. Also being involved in sports is extremely ~~affordable~~ or expensive depending on the sport. For instance a sport like kung-fu may need $50 for uniforms ~~and~~ and the monthly training fees but a sports like Muay Thai need the equipment, medical fees, proper diet etc

Finally in my opinion, participation in sports is a wonderful opportunity for children while also posing great risks if not managed properly.

Do you think parents and coaches have a responsibility to try to stop children from getting hurt while doing sports? Why or why not?

- Yes, coaches and parents absolutely have a responsibility to protect children from getting hurt while participating in sports. Children may not fully understand the risks involved or recognize when they are pushing their bodies too far. Adults are responsible for setting boundaries, ensuring proper training, and making sure safety rules are followed to reduce the chance of injury.

Coaches play a critical role by teaching correct techniques, ~~providing~~ providing proper warmups, and ensuring proper rest periods. They should prioritize long-term health over short-term success. Ignoring injuries or encouraging children to play through pain can lead to serious physical damage that may affect them for years. A responsible coach knows when to stop an athlete for their own safety.

Parents also share this responsibility by monitoring their child's physical and emotional well-being. They should communicate with coaches, seek medical attention when needed, and avoid pressuring children to compete while injured. While minor injuries are inevitable in sports, adults must do everything ~~(best)~~ reasonably possible to avoid major harm and ensure a safe environment.

3 What are some ways that athletes pay for success?

-> ~~(Ans)~~ Most of the time, instead of monetary compensation, athletes pay for success through intense physical demands. Long training sessions can lead to injuries, chronic pain and exhaustion. Many athletes push their bodies beyond normal limits, sometimes risking long-term health issues.

There are also psychological costs. Pressure to perform, fear of failure, and constant competition can lead to stress, anxiety or burnout. Social sacrifices are common as well, since athletes may miss family time, educational opportunities, or a normal childhood.

4 How do parents of children pay for success.

→ Financially, parents often spend large amounts on coaching, travel and tournament fees. These costs can strain family budgets, especially in elite or competitive sports. Time is another major expense, as parents may spend hours travelling and attending practices and events.

Psychologically, parents may experience stress from managing expectations, worrying about injuries or feeling pressure to justify their investment. Some parents also sacrifice their own wellbeing by neglecting rest or personal needs to support their child's athletic journey.
